Goshen Hospital

Oncology nurse Micah Thieszen at IU Health Goshen Center for Cancer Care shaved his head in honor of his niece Maddie, who was diagnosed at age 2 with T-cell lymphoblastic lymphoma. When Micah learned about an organization that encourages adults to become heroes to children fighting cancer by shaving their heads, he knew his thick, curly locks had to go. Micah shaved his head, successfully raising funds supporting cancer research. “She thought it was pretty cool,” Micah said.

Maddie, now 7, is cancer free after a two-year regimen of chemotherapy.

Indiana University Health Goshen Hospital has been called the model for the “new American hospital.” Known for award-winning care, an engaged and invigorated staff, and satisfied patients, Goshen Hospital is committed to continuous improvement. The Hospital encompasses the nationally recognized Goshen Center for Cancer Care, and is also home to a leading Heart & Vascular Center where a team of surgeons, cardiologists, radiologists and naturopathic physicians use the latest diagnostic tools to develop a personalized, holistic plan for each patient. Goshen Hospital believes generosity is an important part of the healing process. That’s why, for those who wish to partner with us in securing the high quality of healthcare for this community, we have created the IU Health Goshen Fund for Excellence. Together we can do even more. To learn more or to tell us your story, visit www.GoshenFundForExellence.org.

As a child, Hiram Rosa's parents could not afford to buy him much, so he welcomes the opportunity to provide something in honor of the children born at IU Health Goshen Hospital. He says it's also a gesture of his love for his own children, the greatest gift he has ever received. Rosa has purchased shoes, onesies, teddy bears and balloons from the Hospital Gift Shop, which he delivers himself to the newborn's parents. Some will look at him as if to say, "Do I know you?" After he explains, they are always very appreciative. Often, it's the first gift the baby receives.

Goshen Hospital

Laura Nauman has been receiving therapeutic care for a chronic disease at Indiana University Health Goshen Hospital for five years. She has received extraordinary clinical care and found solace in visits to the bird sanctuary near the main lobby. “Coming to Goshen Hospital after everything was like coming to a resort,” she says. “I knew everything was going to be OK.” Laura’s appreciation has inspired her to show her gratitude to Goshen Hospital in ways that have benefitted both Colleagues and patients. Twice she and her husband envisioned solutions to routine challenges they experienced during hospital visits—and they have donated the funds to implement them.

Indiana University Health Goshen Hospital provides the best of both worlds—the expertise of a large health system and the personal touch of a small town community hospital. For almost 100 years, we have provided cutting-edge care and a warm environment that have made our patients and our Colleagues among the most satisfied in the industry. It is our mission to maintain those standards—to navigate a fast-changing and challenging environment without compromising care, in any sense of the term.

IU Health Goshen Hospital believes generosity is part of the healing process. That’s why, for those who wish to partner with us in securing the high quality of healthcare for this community, we have created the IU Health Goshen Fund for Excellence. Generosity fuels a commitment to excellence. Together we can do even more. To learn more or to tell us your story, visit www.GoshenFundForExcellence.org.
